

Dentists Dine, Dance At Annual Formal Mount Royal Piazza

SIMPSON'S ORCHESTRA

Large List of Guests Attest to Success of Dental Affair

Some two hundred graduates, undergraduates and friends of the McGill Dental Faculty convened on Friday last, to celebrate the Annual Formal Supper Dance, in the Piazza of the Mount Royal Hotel. Molars, forceps, drills, in fact, all dental worries were forgotten as the merry crowd swung to the strains of Howard Simpson and his orchestra.

In an attempt to make this dance the affair of the season, the committee went out of their way to provide as novel a setting as possible. The result was, according to many of those present, very gratifying. The setting and decorations blended with the atmosphere, to everybody's delight and satisfaction.

German Department Repeating Comedy

"Die Deutschen Kleinstadtler" Plays in Moyse Hall Thursday

FOR ALL STUDENTS

No Admission Charge to be Made; Curtain Rises at 8.30

Due to the success enjoyed by Kotzebue's play "Die Deutschen Kleinstadtler" when it last appeared on the boards at Moyse Hall, it is to be repeated on February 7. The German Department of McGill University will present this four act play in Moyse Hall. The curtain will rise at 8.30 sharp. There will be no charge for admission, and students other than those taking German courses are at liberty to attend.

The dialogue and action of this successful German play are simple, and will be easily followed by those who have a knowledge of the language; while its enjoyment by those not acquainted with German will not be lessened because it is given in a strange tongue.

Portray's German Life
"Die Deutschen Kleinstadtler" presents many scenes of German life which will be of interest to those taking German courses, while the opportunity of hearing the language spoken on the stage is a rare one for students. A partial cast is as follows: Herr Nicolaus Staar, Burgomeister, auch Oberalter zu Krahwinkel, Dr. H. Walker, Frau Untersteuereinnehmerin Staar, seine Mutter, Jean Reid, Sabine, seine Tochter, Elsie Gillemeister, Herr Visekirkenvorsteher Staar, sein Bruder ein Gewürzkramer, Norman Brown, Frau Oberfloss-und Fischmeisterin Brendel, Frau Stadt-Altschekasschreiberin Morgenrot, zwei Mühmen, Helen Parren Alice Vercoe; Herr Bau-berg-und Weginspektorsurbursthut Sperling, Irving Racey; Oliners, Frederick Morgan; Klaus, der Ratsdiener, Laurence McGregor; Elise Magd, Frances McDermot; Ein Bauer, Ein Nachschneider, Anthony Chapman.

Union Announces Ping Pong Fest With Silver Prize

This week will see the beginning of the Ping Pong Tournament at the Union. Entries, which cost a quarter, may be left with Bert at the Tuck Shop or with George at the Billiard Room.

The committee announced last night that a silver cup suitably engraved would be presented to the winner of this tournament. All entries should be made as soon as possible as the draw will be made late Wednesday night.

Last year the Ping Pong tournament proved a great success a large number of entries being received. This year the committee are making a special effort to run the tournament successfully, but they will be unable to do so without the co-operation of a large number of competitors.

Debaters Feature College Parliament

Representatives of McGill and Toronto to Speak Friday 8th

BAKER PRESIDES

Audience to Participate in Discussion of the Motion

Speakers representing the University of Toronto met McGill Debating Union in their annual visit to participate in a Mock Parliament this Friday, the 6th, at 8 P.M. in the Union Ballroom. A R. Kelly of Toronto will act as prime minister, introducing the motion: "That in Canada, East is East and West is West and never the twain shall meet." Leading the opposition will be Arthur Marshall, former vice-president of the McGill Debating Union. Supporting the latter will be James Woods of Toronto. On the government side, Leon Smart, winner of the Talbot-Papineau Trophy for impromptu public speaking, Kenneth Baker, president of the Debating Union, will preside as speaker of the house.

All interested are invited to attend. A large turnout is expected for this function, and plans are being made to accommodate and seat everyone comfortably. Students who are interested are expressly urged to take part in the discussion. After the four principals have delivered their representative arguments pro and con the floor will be thrown open for discussion, and members of the audience are invited to have their say.

French Society To Meet Thursday

La Societe Francaise, at its next meeting on Thursday, February 7th, will feature an oral contest of short stories. These may be humorous, sad or spooky stories. Those wishing to take part are asked to sign the list in the Arts Common Room. All are invited and a great many girls should avail themselves of this occasion of practicing conversational French. There will be three prizes for the three best stories. The meeting will take place in the R.V.C. Common Room at 4 o'clock. An entirely French "gouter" will be served at the close of the meeting.

Exports Of Petroleum And Its Products

Mineral oil n.o.p. was the largest item in the export of petroleum and products from Canada in December. The export was recorded at 4,092,413 gallons at $99,830, being a large increase over December, 1933, when 1,140,980 gallons at $64,481 were exported. The United States and Norway took slightly over 2,000,000 gallons each. Coal oil and kerosene exports at 213,298 gallons were also a large increase over December 1933. Newfoundland took 212,843 gallons and St. Pierre and Miquelon 455. Gasoline and naphtha exports were reported at 793,850 gallons, valued at $84,994, compared with 116,794 at $17,481 in December 1933. Newfoundland took 791,647 gallons and St. Pierre and Miquelon 2,203.

These stories, however, would not be considered eligible for a prize. Any stories should be left with Bill Gentleman.

Abolish Christianity Is Slogan Adopted By Nazi Germany

Prince Loewenstein Addressed People's Forum Yesterday Afternoon

HITLER CALLED DEITY

Not Much Hope For Moderation of National Socialism

"I think that Christians the whole world over are concerned about the cause of the Church in Germany," was the opening remark of Prince Loewenstein, ardent Catholicist and direct descendant of twelve Roman Emperors, when he addressed the People's Forum at the Church of the Messiah, yesterday afternoon.

Speaking in broken English, Prince Loewenstein vividly told his audience of Catholicism and Nationalism in Germany, at the present day. National Socialists speak of Positive Christianity and blame the Roman Catholics for teaching only Negative Christianity. Leaders of the Socialists believe the Pope is "the heir of an insane Asiatic cult." Positive Christianity is based entirely on blood and race. The Catholic Church considers church and state as two different communities. In Germany there are 20,000,000 Catholics and 40,000,000 Protestants. Catholic Youth Movements are under strict regulation, members not being allowed to wear uniforms or badges or to be in the least active. The State wants all youths to be Young Hitlerites, to the tune of "Hoist the flag of paganism!"

Must Have Religion
"No state can exist without religion," declared the speaker. The German leaders, however, have tried to drive out Christ, bringing in all sorts of substitutes. Such slogans as "Hitler is greater and more powerful than Jesus Christ" and "Hitler is the real Holy Ghost," have come from official lips. Even the suggestion of a household shrine containing a statue of Hitler at the altar has been advanced. "National Socialism is trying to establish a new Trinity—a Trinity of blood, race and soil," declared the speaker. The Old Testament has been rejected as a "Bible of Satan." "Christ has never existed as Christ," say some. "He is an invention, a legend, created in Asia Minor and symbolized. He is not of Jewish descent."

"Is there any hope that National Socialism will become moderated?" asked the speaker. "Not in the least," was his emphatic reply. "The Nazis know that when they fall they will fall forever. They have to suppress all sources of liberty of thought, religious and cultural feeling." Thus the medieval term of "Might is right" has become a byword in modern Germany. But the belief exists that Christianity will inevitably triumph.

College's Purpose Growth Of Student

University Provides Adequate Opportunities For Intellectual Growth

M. G. BROOKS SPEAKS

Education Supplies Better Sense of Values to Student

"We come to college that we may leave it mature men and women," was the way Murray G. Brooks concluded his address at Divinity Hall Chapel last night. The speaker said that we do not attend a university just to have a good time, but for more serious reasons.

Some students wish to acquire a general education, while others desire only a technical training in some profession which they intend to pursue. College Sheltered
In colleges, the speaker continued, we are moving about in still water, but outside there is the storm that we have to face. We can only hope that we have adequate equipment to meet it. The university provides an adequate intellectual basis for life. It is here that we learn to think quickly, clearly and independently. But real intelligence is a rare thing even among students.

In the second place "We discover a true philosophy of life." We learn a sense of the relative values of things. Life at the present time seems to be a titanic struggle between the upper dog and the under dog. People must spend most of their time in attempting to fulfill the desire to master and to dominate.

In the third place we come to college to find an absorbing and dynamic purpose in life. Christianity is usually considered to be the way of life. But Christianity is not merely a static code of morals, for a person may have such a code and live up to it without really being religious.

Slum Clearance Forms Topic Of Tomorrow's Talk

Professor E. Nobbs to Address Meeting at R.V.C.

TOMORROW night the McGill Alumnae Society will be addressed by Percy E. Nobbs, who will discuss the slum problem of Montreal. Prof. Nobbs is well-known as the architect who designed the McGill Union, the McGill Engineering Building, and many other local buildings.

The subject which he is to discuss is of great importance and for some months has been under the consideration of a committee largely composed of members of the Board of Trade and the City Improvement League. Prof. Nobbs will be in a position to give the results of their investigations, and will map out a plan for housing and slum clearing in this city.

Mr. Nobbs has much experience in these matters and has been co-operating with Sir Raymond Unwin of London, England; Ernst Kahn, lately of Frankfurt, Germany; and of Ernst Bohn of Cleveland, three noted authorities on this subject, and advisers to the United States on its housing problem.

All students will be heartily welcome to attend this meeting which will be held in R.V.C. at 8.30 p.m. tomorrow night. As it is a question of interest and importance to all a large turnout is expected.

McGill's Thirteenth Revue Defies Jinx

Production Getting Under Way; Chorus Finally Selected

CASTING TOMORROW

Unusually Large Cast Offers Opportunities to Many Students

With choruses completely selected, and going through their routine workouts under the direction of Alan Murray, with the plot finally hammered into shape spiced with all the dynamite that can be expected of a thirteenth edition, the Red and White Revue of 1935 can be said to be well under way. Casting for the various parts is scheduled for tomorrow, and since this year's cast promises to assume mammoth proportions, ample opportunity for any historically-inclined students will be afforded.

Opening its annual engagement at Moyse Hall on March 13th, the thirteenth edition of the Red and White Revue promises to defy all superstition. From present indications, it is suspected that no one will be admitted on the opening night unless accompanied by a black cat, or at least several broken mirrors.

Plot Secret

The producer is still maintaining a stolid silence with reference to the plot and title of this year's Revue. However, it is definitely rumored that the characters do go places, and that the far-famed King of Mongaza is somehow in evidence.

That the Red and White Revue of 1935 will eclipse all former efforts, the producer did admit. Judging from preliminary plans, the dances, music, plot and scenery will blend to give that final tour de force to the college year, an honor traditionally the monopoly of the Revue. All those interested in trying out for the many roles available, are requested to report to the Revue Office in the Union tomorrow afternoon.

Exchange Re-opens For Payment Today

Today and tomorrow, for two days only, let notice be taken, will the Book Exchange resume activity for the purpose of paying out the money, due to students from the sale of their books. Between the house of 11 a.m. and 5.30 p.m., all those students who sold books last January through the Exchange, and also those who have not yet obtained their receipts from last autumn, are given the opportunity of collecting their dues, during these two days. They are reminded to come provided with their official receipts, and the names of all the students to whom money is owed, are printed on page four of this issue.

Graduate Smoker

A limited number of tickets is being made available to undergraduates at the Union Tuck Shop for the Annual Graduates' Smoker to be held in the Union Ballroom Thursday evening, February 7, when Premier Bennett will be the principal speaker.

Trackmen Gathered For Annual Dinner On Friday Evening

Frank Nobbs, Captain-elect, Acted as Toast Master

PRESENTATION MADE

Dr. Lamb Gave Short Address on Trip to Australia

The Union Grill Room last Friday night was the scene of the Annual Senior Track team dinner. About thirty-five members of last season's team and former track stars, as well as a number of professors, were on hand for the occasion.

Captain-elect Frank J. Nobbs was in the chair and acted as toastmaster. After the toast to the King, John A. Hutchins, former Track Captain, proposed the toast to Phil Edwards, McGill's outstanding trackman. This was responded to by Phil himself. The next toast, proposed by Frank Nobbs, was to Gerry Sampson, member of several McGill Track teams, at present seriously ill in the hospital. This was replied to by Jim Worrall, a close friend and team mate of Sampson's.

Toasts Team

Lt. Col. N. B. MacLean then proposed a toast to the present team, which was responded to by John H. McDonald, manager of the team. H. G. Morgan then proposed a toast to Past Teams, which was replied to by Franco Consiglio, a former Track Captain. Everett Crutchlow, former Track Manager, then proposed a toast to F. M. Van Wagner, the coach who has turned out eleven championship teams in the past fifteen years. The coach replied to the toast himself.

Herb Crabtree, one of the track club's old timers, then proposed a toast to Ernie Cook, the trainer of the Track Team. Ernie in replying said how much he liked working with the boys and how he regretted the illness of Gerry Sampson.

Hard Trophy Presented

One of the features of the evening was the presentation of the Warren Hurd Trophy to Phil Edwards. This trophy was presented by the Hurd family in memory of Warren Hurd, former McGill Track Captain who died a few years ago. It is presented annually to the winner of the inter-collegiate half mile. The trophy was presented for the first time on Friday night by Dr. R. Kennedy.

Laborites Discuss Bennett Social Plan

Former Editor of "Alarm Clock" Addresses Labour Club

WORKERS INSURED

British Act of 1911 to Serve as Model

Premier Bennett's recently announced project for social insurance against unemployment, formed the subject of a talk given by Albert Moellman, former editor of the "Alarm Clock," before the Labour Club on Friday evening.

Designed with a view to meet, partially at least, today's difficult economic situation, especially as it affects the workers, it follows broadly along the lines of the Act passed in Britain in 1911. There are differences, however; for, while in Britain unemployment insurance has been separated from unemployment relief, the Canadian bill will deal with unemployment insurance exclusively.

Explains Payments
There are definite payments which the worker has to make, in return for which he obtains certain benefits, definitely limited. To be eligible, a worker has to be over sixteen years of age. Contributions will be as follows: the employee to pay two-fifths, the employer the same, and the government one-fifth of the former two totals.

Benefits are payable only for at least forty weeks within a two-year period. Once this condition has been met, the out-of-work employee is paid by the government as follows: he receives payment for 78 days, and one day for every week over the minimum 40 weeks previously mentioned.

There will be an unemployment commission to administer this Act through the medium of the employment exchange bureau. The commission will consist of one person representing the employer, one representing the employees, and the third a neutral.

Asbestos Exports

Exports of asbestos in December were valued at $391,000, compared with $619,000 in December, 1933. Asbestos sand and waste was up slightly, and manufactures at $13,950 were more than double.

'Old McGill' Annual Announces Contest For Snap Shots

General plans for the Annual this year have been made known. And among those facts revealed was the organization again this year of a photographic contest. A highlight of this competition is the generous distribution of prizes. There will be among other awards ten annuals for deserving exhibits. The competition is to be carried on as formerly, a minor change in the enlargement of the Campers Life section being one of the few changes effected.

The sport section edited by Doug Amaron plans to use a similar set up to that of last year, having pictures of all intercollegiate champions again.

Hormone Research At McGill Outlined

Physical Society Hears Dr. J. B. Collip of Bio-Chemistry Department

EXTRACTS TESTED

Stresses Need of Living Test-objects in Observing Effects of Preparations

The rapid progress that has recently been made in the field of endocrinology, the study of internal gland secretions, is to be attributed largely to the use of live animals as test-objects, according to a statement made by Dr. J. B. Collip at the 7th sessional meeting of the McGill Physical Society.

Dr. Collip, of the Bio-Chemistry department at McGill University, outlined the work being carried on at the University in connection with hormone research.

Discussed Hormones
"Hormones," explained Dr. Collip, "are the chemical messengers" of the body, are secreted by the various glands and are directly responsible for the growth and functioning of sex and other organs. A sudden decrease of hormones, by removal of the pituitary gland results in stunted growth. By administering a suitable hormone extract it is possible to restore the subject to normality in the space of a few days. A great danger is to be seen in over-stimulating the system by excessive dosage."

Using rats, and other animals as test-objects, the efficacy of the prepared extracts is determined and then applied to human beings.

Dr. Eves, Dean of the Department of Physics, in moving a vote of thanks to the speaker, suggested that the unit of hormone extract dosage, when accurately determined, be called "one Collip," in recognition of the speaker's invaluable contributions to the science of hormone research.

Mount Royal Hotel For Plumbers Ball

Engineers and Graduates to Have First Chance at Tickets

A change of scene from the Windsor to the Mount Royal Hotel was announced by the committee of the Plumbers' Ball last night. For some years past McGill's Plumbers' social function has taken place in the Windsor but considerations of space led to the decision for the change of venue. It is understood that both the ballroom and piazza have been engaged. The ball takes place March 5th.

Other plans are not as yet definitely decided and last night the choice of an orchestra had still to be made with three or four of Montreal's best-known bands in the running. It was announced that the number of tickets this year will be limited and while they will be sold primarily to engineering students and graduates, students in other faculties will be given an opportunity of purchasing a few.

The Plumbers' Ball, long considered by Engineers as their most important function, has lately grown in popularity with other faculties. Last year it attained the distinction of being given considerable space in one of New York's social columns.

Announcement of ticket sales will be made shortly.

Graduates' Gambol

The Graduate Students' Association is holding an informal dance under the name of "Graduates' Gambol" in the Union Ballroom on Friday, February 15th. The music will be provided by Bill Gordon and his orchestra. The program includes several novelty dances for which there will be prizes. Tickets for this dance cost one dollar and may be obtained from any member of the executive.

Experiences Related Of Jewish Olympiad, Maccabi Movement

David White Addressed Maccabean Circle Sunday

"PHYSICAL REGENERATION"

International Maccabia at Tel-Aviv, Aims of Maccabi Movement

Mr. David White, president of the American Maccabi organization, was yesterday afternoon the guest speaker of the Maccabean circle. Mr. White formerly athletic leader of Harvard in 1932 led an American delegation of Jewish youths to Tel-Aviv for the Maccabiah the first Jewish Olympiad. It was his experiences while there which formed the basis of his talk.

The general mood of the Jew in Palestine was not what one would expect he observed, arriving there during the Purim festival a spirit of hilarity of good cheer prevailed such as he had not seen in any other Jewish community. The gathering there of representatives from 22 countries heightened the already jubilant festive season. Varied colored flags of many countries, notables and officials in full regalia, 5,000 contestants in their blue and white uniforms, presented a colorful and unforgettable spectacle in Tel-Aviv.

Spirit of Maccabians

"This scene symbolized at once the return of the Jewish to the land of their fathers, and the rise of a new spirit, the spirit of the Maccabians. For three days the Jewish youth and their elders enjoyed themselves as seldom they had before. It is this spirit they wish to perpetuate by the continuation and the expansion of the Jewish Olympiad."

Mr. White then referred to the work of the organization in helping to build up the Jewish youth, who has until quite recently drifted towards intellectual development almost to the exclusion of their physical development. The Maccabi organization has as its aim to foster in young Jews and Jewesses an interest in open air sports and games by helping them to organize into "locality clubs." By lending these clubs moral support and by organizing the international games, in which the pick of all athletes participate, this latter of course acts as both an impetus and an inspiration to the many local clubs and to every individual Jew.

Object of Movement

In summary then Mr. White expressed the movement as striving also to encompass in its sphere of activities cultural leadership. Thus we see the ambitious plans of the movement to guide and urge the youth in pursuits such as the study of Hebrew, and to bring about, as well as they may, the physical regeneration of the youth. Splendidly laying the foundation of a healthier, stronger, more virile Jewish race.

Mr. Vineberg was in the chair, and the speaker was thanked by Mr. Gross.

Alexander Plays At Newman "At Home"

Two Piano Orchestra to be Feature at Dance

DANCING 10 TO 3

Mount Royal Hotel Scene of Annual Newman Club Function

When Eddie Alexander strikes the opening chords at ten o'clock on Friday night, February eighth, the Annual "At Home" of the Newman Club will commence. This year's dance will take place in the Mount Royal Hotel. The ballroom has been reserved for the dancers; while supper will be served in the piazza. The whole ninth floor will thus "Go McGill" for this night.

From ten o'clock until three the dancers will hold sway. The music will be under the direction of the capable Eddie Alexander, with his two piano feature, and there is a possibility that a vocalist will add color to the evening. The ballroom will be suitably decorated to give the McGill touch to the proceedings. The committee reports that considerable care has been given to this question this year, and the result should please everyone.

All arrangements have now been completed. Tickets, which are selling steadily, are obtainable from Frank Corrigan, Chairman of the Committee; from Ward O'Connor, who heads the ticket sales; or from any member of the Committee. Those in charge of this year's dance are: Frank Corrigan, Charles Letourneau, Miss Katherine Kelly, Miss Rita Legault, and James O'Neill.

Names of the Patrons and Patronesses of this year's Newman Club "At Home" will be published shortly, it was announced last night.

Vol. XXIV—Monday, Feb. 4, 1935—No. 70

Our Ignoble Colleges

PRIME MINISTER R. B. BENNETT has been credited with the following statement in a recent trans-Canada radio broadcast: "Our problems are so acute that economists are in deadly combat regarding the manner of their solution. We gladly leave them in such combat while we ourselves go on to work out the necessary reforms." That an implicit denunciation of economic thought and those who pursue it should come from the lips of such a man in such a position is something which should give educational leaders cause to reconsider their position and scrutinize their efforts.

That one should expect university leaders to be exercising a deft but none the less compelling control over the direction and trends of modern statesmanship and industry is indeed reasonable. The broad backing of economic principles and the expansive non-partisan vision available to university economists for example should enable them to contribute greatly to the national welfare as an advisory body. That they not only fail to exert such an influence but indeed even fail to obtain a sympathetic hearing for their principles, as evidenced by the Bennett statement, is of great discredit to both the university and to modern administrative leaders.

That Premier Bennett's recently announced so-called reform program could be greatly aided by the intelligent advice of trained observers, such as our colleges should be capable of supplying, is undoubtedly true. Unfortunately, however, he has clearly indicated how far this thought is from his mind and the attitude of our professors toward the situation is not likely to bring about a change of heart.

Though our Prime Minister has not revealed a very broad vision by his condemnation of the school of economic thought we cannot help but feel that he is somewhat justified in his attitude and that the main fault lies within the university.

The traditional university policy of isolation from the topsy-turvy world is one which in the past has enabled universities to proceed unfettered in the search for true knowledge, scholarship and culture. Outside interference in university life or even a close contact with it would have prevented the successful pursuit of higher education. Modern conditions, however, have led to the introduction of studies, and rightly so, into the university, which if they are to be adequately pursued must be conducted in close contact with present day conditions and leaders. The opinions of intellectual observers must be so well founded in both theory and practice that their opinions will apply to actual conditions applying outside as well as inside the university.

The seclusion policy which the exponents of these studies still follow, largely in deference to tradition it would seem, results in a narrow, one-sided viewpoint which goes unheeded by a different world. Such seclusion has worked such havoc with the applicability of the projected principles that our unfortunate economists are quickly smitten down by denunciations of the Bennett type whenever they do choose to break forth from their hibernating quarters.

That not only economics but also industrial psychology, sociology and many other university pursuits may only make their maximum contribution to the national welfare through a close co-operation and harmonious relationship with those engaged in the task of administering and directing our affairs of state and industry can hardly be denied. While, on the other hand, the prospect of any contribution of merit being made while the popular conception is that the pursuits are merely academic and of no practical value, is indeed remote.

The present holocaust is evidence of the past need for a closer co-operation between university thought and the conduct of industry and state while the apparently increasing need for a planned economy in the future makes intelligent direction of national affairs an even more important consideration.

That university leaders will apparently not be given the opportunity to aid in this responsible work will be a national calamity, attributable in no small measure to their attitude of smug superiority and remarkable indifference to the viewpoints and background of political and commercial leaders.

SAGA SHADOWS

The quest for happiness in the modern era vividly portrayed in:

New Lives For Old

IT WAS, he supposed, a very gay party. People were behaving in the usual manner, being excessively jolly, excessively witty and excessively susceptible to the humour of any witicism on the part of others—particularly if it had a slightly blasphemous meaning. Drink there was in abundance, and music from an elaborate rancid in the corner that poured out its fulsome syncopation in strident, blaring tones. Henry was bored, for the first time in many years. He was surprised at this feeling and a little bit annoyed, because he was not at all the type of man who became bored at parties. As a matter of fact he seemed to thrive on them and he had a hearty contempt for people who never missed a party and yet cultivated that blasé and cynical attitude that implied that they were just a little bit superior to it all. Henry's feeling for entertainment—constant and superlative entertainment—was that they were the sole things that made life worth living. Perhaps the reason was that he had been brought up on them and was not used to anything else. He had money, thanks to an enterprising and surprisingly unscrupulous grandfather, he had looks, that women alternately exulted and wept over, and he had charm, witness the clubs to which he belonged, the circles to which he had an entrée, and the numerous morons who clapped him on the back and said "Hello, Henry how are you? Have a drink?" Elaine interrupted his musing.

"Have a drink," she said sociably.

"No, thanks," he answered, surprised at the novelty of the reply.

"Mind if I sit down and talk to you?" Elaine inquired, sitting down on the chesterfield beside him.

"Delighted," he returned mechanically.

Elaine was very beautiful in that rather hard and stereotyped manner peculiar to many American girls. Henry noticed this and, for no reason at all, remembered a book he had read called "Faraway" in which the hero, having imbibed too freely one night, couldn't distinguish his fiancée, and claimed she looked exactly the same as all the other girls. It was exaggerated, he decided, but had elements of truth. Consider Elaine, for instance. She was very beautiful—everyone said so. Yet her carefully rouged lips, her delicately plucked and pencilled eyebrows and her massaged eyes were very similar to the other girls in the room. Only the colour of the eyes and the coiffure showed any individuality. Yet she was far more charming than the other women, or he would not have singled her out, and she was clever, in a way.

"What's the particular matter, darling?" she asked, "or shouldn't I ask?" She had tact, too.

"I don't know," he said, "I'm feeling down."

"Too much drink?"

"Too much everything," he answered. "Too much drink, too much noise, too much music, too much talking."

She looked a little surprised, but said nothing.

"Let's go to my apartment," she said.

"It's pretty early," he replied. "It's not 2 o'clock yet."

"Well, that doesn't matter."

"No, I don't want to go particularly," he said.

"It's not that I'm not enjoying the party, but that..."

"Go on," she prompted.

"I don't know, my sins must be catching up with me. What are we going to do tomorrow night?"

"You promised to take me to the Ritz," she said.

"You're awfully pretty tonight," he said.

She gave a little laugh at that but she was obviously pleased.

"I'm glad you think so," she answered.

He got up and extended his hand to her.

"Come on," he said. "My mood's over. Fun, laughter and jollity shall be our pass-word."

The moved across the room, Henry Madison tall and straight and commanding, and Elaine Baxter, tall and lissome and graceful. They were a delightful couple, thought Tom Burling as he watched them from the door-way. Elaine was a girl in a thousand—too bad Henry would never appreciate her. A few months more, maybe a year—then a trip abroad alone and when he came back who would it be then? Nobody would attempt to answer.

"Damn fool!" he muttered.

Tom Burling was not a sophisticated. He disliked parties, not hostilely, but amiably. Louise, his wife, whom he still liked and whom he determined he was always going to like was fond of parties and Tom was only too pleased to make a small concession that would please his wife. Tom's idea of a good evening was a book and a glass of beer. His work interested him during the day, although he was not wealthy and had neither hopes nor ambitions of ever being rich. So long as he could live in comparative security on a small scale, he was happy. He did not resent Henry's position but he had a profound contempt for his mode of living. He did not feel it was useless as much as he felt that Henry was not getting the enjoyment out of it that his enthusiasm and sincerity should lead him to expect. Henry was leading an aimless, not a sinful, life, he felt. Hedonism was Henry's philosophy and it was not paying him its dividends. He watched Louise conversing vivaciously with John Allgood, whose surname was exceptionally deceptive. All they thought about here was drinking, affairs with any passable woman, and all the other embellishments and trappings of a complicated social structure. To enjoy himself at these affairs, Tom had to put himself "in character" as he described it—he had to assume a role so that he would not be obviously critical because after all these people had a right to live as they wished and if he disagreed with it—after all it was no business of his. He was quite content with his own style of living and he would resent any interference or dictation from anyone else, so he refused to act similarly with other people. He liked Henry however and he worried about him because Henry, some day, would be too old for these affairs and then what? Disillusion? Discontent? Probably.

Here was Henry advancing now, somewhat unsteadily although far from being drunk.

"My dear old school-fellow, room-mate and friend in loco parentis," he said, "why that dismal frown. This is a party, not a discussion on meta-bolism."

"I could hardly confuse the two," Tom assured him. "Are you enjoying yourself?"

"Of course," said Henry. "Don't I always?"

"I don't know," replied Tom. "Do you?"

"Certainly," he was assured. "This is living."

"I don't want to be disagreeable, Henry, my friend," said Tom, lighting a cigarette he didn't want, "but I don't think you are. I've been watching you."

"Spying on me, eh?"

"Yes, and until Elaine the Lily maid rescued you, you were profoundly distressed, confess it or not."

"That makes me a liar, doesn't it," observed Henry.

"Yes," agreed Tom, "it does."

"O.K., you win. I'm a liar. Have a drink."

"Listen Henry," said Tom, "I'm not prone to either arguing, lecturing, or preaching, you know, but I feel it my duty as your friend in loco parentis as you put it, to tell you you're a damn fool."

"Thanks, Tom, I'll do the same for you some day. Have a drink."

"You're handsome, you've had more mistresses than you can count, you've even tried marriage once, you drink, dance and think of nothing but parties and women. Right?"

"Absolutely, thank God."

"It's alright for a start, but you're sick of it. I haven't any objection to it except that when it's all over it's not going to be worth it. And you know it."

Henry looked sceptical.

"So..." he queried.

"You once expressed a wish to live in the backwoods to enjoy the novelty of living independently. Why don't you do that now and while you're away figure out a sensible way to live?"

"Elaine?"

"Elaine was all very well once. She's an awfully nice girl and she's going to be terribly surprised one of these days. You have a curious knack of disappearing after throwing over a woman, and then, coming back and carefully selecting another. You're spoiled, I suppose, and I'm not trying to reform you but I'm trying to tell you that you should be able to figure out something much better."

"I doubt it. Most of the time I'm satisfied."

"How old are you now? You're getting on, man. You know those pot-bellied coming creatures that propel glistening blondes around night clubs? That's you, regaining your youth, searching for comfort in champagne and skirts, some day. Only don't expect me to recognize you—I'll look around, over and past you but not at you."

"You paint pleasant pictures, Tom," said Henry admiringly. "You almost make me feel creepy."

"Women are all right, in moderation, the same as cigarettes. Louise said to me the other day 'The more I smoke the less I want to smoke, but the more I smoke, the more I smoke.' The same thing applies to you and your women—be rational, for heaven's sake, you're obviously travelling in a vicious circle."

Henry took out a cigarette and lit it.

"Good man," he said admiringly, and walked out the door.

Tom smiled to himself, saw Louise winking at him and crossed to her. A moment later the two were engaged in a conversation on the dresses in the room, in which Louise took a great interest. Time passed.

When Henry walked out the door, he picked up his hat and coat and went outside. It was a magnificent winter night, and the city was exceedingly attractive. The roar of distant traffic, vague and indistinct, came to him as though from far away. Immediate to him the only sound was the crisp crunching of footsteps receding down the street. The stars, cool and clear, winked in the heavens; the complete absence of any wind made the silence profound. He breathed deeply and felt exhilarated. Tom was obviously right. He had known it for a long time but had repeatedly refused to accept what he knew was the truth. Once when he had confided it to a friend in a moment of intimacy, a laugh, spontaneous and disdainful had been the answer.

"Splendid," the friend had said. "The only difficulty is that you couldn't change if you tried. Thinking is an admirable occupation for the aged and blind but it never controls action. No matter what you think, my dear Henry, it will never change your way of life. I know human nature. My philosophy differs radically from my mode of living—so does yours—so does everyone's. If everyone did what they knew was right the world would be very pretty, the trouble is that they can't change."

Henry decided this was foolish. Fine. Now the problem was to find what he should change; he must find a new course, and correct existing faults. He would begin where Tom said he should begin—with women. Already he was tired of Elaine, as he had expected he would be. Action was the word, and Elaine was already discarded. Tomorrow, flowers, a letter and the business was done. Why not go the whole dog? Why not adopt an entirely new existence. He could do it, he was perfectly confident. And he would go away to—well, where? It didn't matter much, really, he had been almost everywhere. He would spend a year or so abroad, planning and calculating a new life. Life that would be a balance of study, in which he had always determined he would indulge some day; accumulate that library he had always planned; find some interesting and constructive work, and add a small touch of entertainment necessary to provide balance and give zest. He would give away most of his money and live on a simple scale. It sounded magnificently attractive. How many men, he wondered, cherished similar dreams in their heart, and how many never allowed themselves or never had the opportunity of following their pipe-dreams and making them a reality as he would. And he would, he knew. This was not idle imagination; he had will-power. He felt better and filled with a new enthusiasm. He walked along the street, oblivious to the world, happy in his new found ideas and busy in applying them in imagination.

A voice shattered his dreams.

"Henry, you old devil!"

He turned and saw John Woodward, splendidly handsome in evening dress, and accompanied by a glamorous young thing who clung to him for dear life.

"Where are you going?" exclaimed John, seizing him by the arm and carrying him into the apartment house they were about to enter. "Haven't everyone's there."

"Can't," said Henry, trying to disengage himself.

"Where are you going?"

"Home."

"Don't be a damn fool. Oh, this is Evelyn—Evelyn Hastings. Evelyn, this is Henry Madison—the gayest man in town and if you don't know him you've missed something."

"I can't go—I don't want to go," objected Henry. "I'm tired and I'm anxious to go home."

"Nonsense, we're in the elevator now, you can't get out if you want to. Helen would never forgive me for not bringing you. There's somebody there I want you to meet."

And so he found himself at Helen's party, taciturn and still deep in his dreams of a new life, starting now.

The new girl whom Woodward introduced him to was charming. She had possibilities. Before he realized it, Henry was drinking, being very dashing and very gallant, using all the little tricks the girls loved and the men envied—in short the new girl, Joan, was completely subjugated.

Henry answered the telephone. It was Tom Burling.

"Say, Elaine's pretty well cut up. It's a bit too thick, I think, dropping her like that and getting a new one right away. I thought you were a reformed man. Didn't my pearly words of wisdom take root the other night?"

"What words of wisdom?"

"About going in the wrong direction. You're a damn fool, Henry, I can't see any sense in this business."

"Go to hell," said Henry, and hung up.

"Joan!" he called. "Come here a minute."

New Year's Day In China

TODAY, February 4th, is New Year's day in China. While this is being read in dreary Monday morning lectures, the Chinese are enthusiastically celebrating their year's greatest event—New Year's Day.

In all parts of China this one holiday has been observed with intense patriotic and religious fervor since time immemorial. The Chinese calendar upon which this date is established goes back far into the mythical past beyond any authentic records. (The earliest of known dates in Chinese history is about 2000 B.C.)

The celebrations are carried out in innumerable elaborate ceremonies and rites. Livid conceptions of the household gods are set in some of the Chinese homes to scare off evils.

Grotesque images are paraded through the throngs in the heavily decorated streets. Equally grotesque are the kites which are flown outside the towns and villages. Yellow and

Hockeyists Down Blues, 4-2 — Cagers Lose To Western

Redmen Gain Firm Hold On Intercollegiate Crown

Crutchfield and Duff Play Well For McGill — McHugh Brilliant in Goal — Fast Game Keeps Goalies Busy — McLelland Best For Varsity — Redmen's Back-checking Superior — Gordie Crutchfield Earns Two Goals and an Assist

(Special to McGill Daily by Allison A. M. Walsh)

McGILL'S REDMEN practically clinched the Intercollegiate Hockey Championship for 1934-35 by defeating Varsity 4-2 on Saturday evening. Displaying a steadier brand of hockey, with brilliant back-checking, they had much the better of the play after a somewhat shaky start.

Gordie Crutchfield and Alex Duff were the pick of the Redmen, all of whom played well, while McHugh played his usual cool game in goal. McLelland, stellar centre, stood out for Toronto.

Redmen Start Poorly
McHugh was called on to act quickly when several Blue attacks came dangerously near soon after start of play. McGill seemed temporarily disorganized, and only the goalie's fine work saved a score. After 12 minutes of play, McPherson slipped in a rebound on Hendry's assist.

McGill, recovering, flashed some nice combination play to get in close. Crutchfield stickhandled his way through the Blue defence, stumbled, recovered his balance, and scored. Fast, wide-open play kept the goalies busy, and McHugh saved coolly when Devine got right in on him. Loughheed, in his turn, juggled the puck on a hard McGill shot while the crowd gasped, but managed to drop it behind his cage. Meiklejohn made several nice rushes before the end of the period. Varsity had a slight edge on play in the period, holding their own even when short-handed.

Slower Pace
The second period opened with a slower pace noticeable, more attention being paid to defensive hockey. Rolly Lamb crashed into the boards back of the Varsity net, and had to be assisted off the ice. McHugh was again called on to make a save from Devine. On the return play Loughheed nearly hit Meiklejohn's long shot get by him. Wigie was ruled off for tripping, and Crutchfield played well while McGill was short-handed. He broke away with Duff and scored his second goal with a neat shot.

In a wild scramble around the McGill net McLelland nearly scored, but two Redmen jumped in front of the goal and saved. Crosby was ruled off for tripping, and was followed to the penalty bench by MacPherson and McLernon, off for scragging. The weakened Redmen held off a strong Blue rush, and Wigie returned to play with a plaster on the back of his head, having received a bad cut at the beginning of the period. Crosby scored McGill's third goal on a pass from Duff just before the period ended.

McLernon Scores
Valiquette led several Varsity rushes at the opening of the last period, but the Redmen made it 4-1 when McLernon scored from a hard angle on a pass from Crutchfield. Toronto's back-checking was weak, and Loughheed was called on to save in rapid succession. Meiklejohn was ruled off, and Duff stickhandled well while McGill was short-handed.

In a scramble around the McGill net, McLelland scored for the Blue. McPherson getting credit for the assist. Loughheed saved well from Duff on the final play of the game.

Red Captain

Gordie (the Whiz) Meiklejohn, whose steady work on the defence has had much to do with the success of the McGill senior hockeyists this season, "Mike" has led the young squad to a firm hold on the college crown and to what is hoped will prove a play-off berth in the local Senior Group.

Junior Hockeyists Meet Vics Tonight

Game to Decide Second-place Berth

ROYALS LEADING

IN WHAT will probably be their last game before the J.A.H.A. play-offs, the Junior McGill hockeyists meet the close-rivalling Vics at the Forum tonight to decide their final play-off position. The Vics and Junior Redmen are at the moment tied for second place. Both teams have ten points to their credit and, since the McGill contenders have played one more game, a McGill victory might call for another game.

The Royals definitely have the top position with eighteen points piled up from the season's work. Fourth place is still open, Canadians and Verdun having an equal chance to snatch it.

Successful Season
The Junior Redmen have had a successful year, and but for a slump after the Christmas holidays, they have led a strong team in all their matches. Of the squad several men have developed an outstanding brand of hockey. Notable among these is Paul Pidcock, right-winger, who starred for University of Manitoba last year and has since played his way to a reputation likely to warrant a Senior berth next year. Dave Tennant in goal has been a mainstay of the team and has been directly responsible, through his brilliant work for many of the McGill wins.

Play-off prospects are very uncertain. Royals, with the league's top-notch team, will make a strong bid for the championship. They have been tied and lost to McGill during the year but it will be an uphill struggle for the Redmen to overtake them in the next few weeks.

For second place, chances look quite good for the Redmen. The two squads, Vics and McGill, are pretty even and in their last encounter, when Tennant was away, Vics only won by a single goal.

Smart Mustang Squad Gains Close Victory

McGill Feels Absence of Schneerer and Bowes — Smooth-working Purple Team Now Heads League — Hayter Outstanding For Western — Gormley Leads Scoring — Young in Scoring Role — Redmen Weak on Free Shots — Second Defeated by Southwestern "Y"

AS a result of their close win over McGill by a 29-25 score here on Saturday, Western's smart cage representatives jumped into the lead in the Intercollegiate Basketball loop with two wins and one loss to their credit. The Redmen's defeat prompted many of their followers to pause and try to recollect the last occasion on which Coach Van Wagner's proteges have lost a game in the college league.

Research unearthed the fact that, prior to Saturday's defeat, they had suffered only one loss in the past four years they have held the silverware, and that to Varsity some two seasons back by a one-point margin. Members of the team would be the last to offer any excuses for their defeat, but the absence through illness of two regulars, Schneerer and Bowes, was a sore blow to "Van" and his men, and it is a safe bet that the score would have been reversed had these players been in uniform. McGill's play was at times rather disorganized, while the Mustangs' block plays worked to perfection. Weakness on free shots was an important factor in the Redmen's defeat.

Western Opens Attack
From the opening whistle Western let loose a barrage of shots, most of which went wide. Hayter and Garret each succeeded in sinking one, but counters by Gormley and Small put McGill ahead 5-4, with ten minutes gone. Gormley again slipped by the close-checking purple defence to net a field goal, which was followed up by a long one from Young to make it 9-5. The Mustangs, led by Hayter, now forged ahead. Chermiak, sparsely-thatched Western veteran, netted two in succession, and despite a neat basket by Brown, the Purple team was ahead 17-11 at the half-time interval.

The second period opened fast, free shots by Hayter and Chermiak lengthening the Westerners' lead. At this point the latter committed his fourth foul and was disqualified. Gormley and Young promptly sank two field goals apiece to again tie up the score at 19 all, with 7 1/2 minutes played. Tight, close-checking play was resulting in a good many fouls being called by Referee Levy, and the Red squad was weakened through the disqualification of Jeffrey and Young. Garret led another offensive, which brought the score up to 28-20 in favour of the Mustangs with five minutes to go. A feverish last-minute McGill attack failed to draw the Redmen up equal, despite the determined efforts of Gormley and Small, who capped hard games with a basket apiece before the final whistle blew with the score 29-25 for Western.

Western Plays Deceptive
Coach Lew Davies of the Mustangs handled his team well, and his deceptive block often caught the Redmen flat-footed. Hayter was the kingly of the Purple attack, and Garret and Rider fitted well into the combination. Gene Gormley played a standout game for McGill and led the scoring with five field goals. Don Young relinquished his usual play-making role to Stew Brown, and turned instead to the business of scoring baskets, gaining six points for the Redmen. Don Small was watched closely, but marked up five points, while Brown played steadily on the defence. Corrigan and Jeffrey, brought up from the intermediates to replace Schneerer and Bowes, both proved competent guards.

While it is hardly likely that the two ailing players will be sufficiently recovered for next Saturday's engagement with Queen's, it is hoped that they will be ready for the arduous London-Toronto trip two weeks hence.

Ping Pong Tourney Begins This Week

The Union House Ping Pong Tourney will be held this week in the McGill Union. Entry lists are now open and may be enlarged by paying a quarter to George or Bert at the Union.

The Committee hopes to have enough names to enable them to close the lists on Wednesday night and get the play underway on Thursday.

This year the Committee is presenting a silver cup to the winner of the tourney. The draw, as soon as made, will be posted in the Ping Pong room of the Union where it may be seen by all.

In the past the Ping Pong tourneys have been very popular and the Committee feels sure that the undergraduates will support the present effort. Anybody who is a member of the Union is eligible and a large turnout is expected.

Grapplers Prepare For Interfaculty Meet On Saturday

Wrestlers and Fencers Hold Eliminations Today

Coach Saxon's grunt and groan men are holding their eliminations today at the Field House. The competition should be keen, for the Aggies from Macdonald are coming with a strong team. The finalists in tonight's matches will win a place on their respective interfaculty teams. The Interfaculty meet takes place this Saturday, February 9th.

The wrestlers have been showing good form in their practice sessions, giving Coach Saxon high hopes for the coming Intercollegiate Meet at Kingston. Falle at 145 pounds has been very impressive in his practice bouts and bids fair to cop the 145 lb. title. Diakin is suffering from a sore shoulder and will be unable to wrestle tonight but will be ready for Saturday's meet.

Fencers Meet Tonight

All wrestlers are advised to be at the Field House at 5 p.m. sharp. The Fencers are also holding their eliminations tonight. Coach Raimondi has developed a good team this year and believes they will retain their intercollegiate title. The eliminations will take place at the M.A.A.A. at 8 p.m. The Intercollegiate B.W.&F. meet is scheduled for February 16th, at Kingston.

crimson of the most brilliant hues are in evidence everywhere.

Western civilization with its many thrills on Chinese customs is only felt in the commercial centres. The vast interior of China is still untouched and continues its life of the past. But western culture or not, on this day, the First Day in the Thirtieth Year of the Chinese Republic, the spirits of their ancestors reign supreme over the Chinese people.

Music Review

MONTREAL ORCHESTRA. From a point of view of music appreciation, the first of two children's concerts presented on Saturday morning in the Mount Royal Hotel by the Montreal Orchestra was a distinct success. Before beginning the concert proper Conductor Douglas Clarke, stressed the great amount of teamwork which is necessary in order that an orchestra may perform well. Then he pointed out the various strings and woodwinds while the members of the orchestra played a few notes on each instrument. In the next concert Mr. Clarke intends to point out the remaining instruments.

The program itself appealed greatly to the many children who were present. Before each number the conductor gave a short explanation of the selection which enabled those present to follow the music more easily. First on the rather informal treat were the first two movements of Hadyn's "Surprise" Symphony in G. One could almost see the original audience jumping from their reverie at the sound of the loud chord. Following this was the first movement of the Symphony No. 2 in D by Brahms. This received very good treatment but the first violins could have given a better performance.

Following this was the Scherzo from "A Midsummer-Night's Dream" by Mendelssohn. The flute solo proved to be well-liked by the audience of children. Then there was the short little fantasia, Entr'acte of the Little Fauns by the modern composer Piere. Next on the program were three numbers from Tchaikovsky's Nutcracker Suite. This proved to be the best attempt of the morning and the children were with the orchestra all the way.

The final number, the excellent arrangement of the Shepherd's Hey by Grainger, simply took the house by storm. The lively, vivacious tune was liked better the second time it was played than the first time. On the whole the program was one which appealed to the young audience. At

At The Theatres

Capitol Theatre

THE "LIVES OF A BEGAL LANCER," at the Capitol this week, gives us a picture of Indian Border life with that romantic aura which is so characteristic of the roy-hued glasses of Hollywood producers. The picture is, however, worth seeing and the lover of action will be satisfied.

The photography is of a high order and some scenes are of extraordinary merit. The story although bordering on the melodramatic and slightly tarnished by false sentiment, is an interesting one and holds the attention. The conclusion shows us the hero, Gary Cooper giving up his life for his country and the honor of a comrade. He fits into the part very well and gives a fine portrayal of the colonial who is a graduate of this University, a fact which should gratify the more patriotically-minded of our fellow-students. In order to remain in the "What Price Glory" tradition, Cooper and his fellow-officer, Franchot Tone put on a mental, and occasionally physical duel, in the best Flagg and Quinn manner. The acting is generally on a high plane, although the exigencies of the plot call for no erotic display. Decidedly well-worth a visit.

A Silly Symphony, "The Tortoise and the Hare" is entertaining.

Important Meeting For Players' Club

"Autumn Crocus" to be Lavish Production, States Executive

The executive of the Players' Club announces a very important general meeting for tomorrow, to grapple with an unexpected situation that has arisen in connection with the forth-coming production of "Autumn Crocus." It is to be in the Union at 5 p.m., and it is imperative that it not be overlooked. Also important is the fact that the Poster Competition, sponsored by the Club, closes definitely Wednesday (Feb. 6) and all those submitting entries must do so, at the Club room before that date.

According to the director, Mr. Filmore Sadler, everything is running smoothly, and satisfactory progress is being made in preparation for the presentation of their second major production of the year. The rehearsals are reported as being very encouraging and the members of the cast seemed to have grasped a real understanding of their respective parts. Every phase and detail is progressing very nicely, including the scenery, under the direction of Max Roth which promises to surpass even that of "The Devil's Disciple." The executive is planning on a brilliant opening night, scheduled for February 13th, on this account.

Students are reminded of the ticket-selling competition for which the first prize is $5.00.

Dear Sir:

May I through the medium of your columns, caution that budding columnist who calls himself McParfootin, to exercise just a little caution in the way he characterises people, even though he mentions no names. I very much object to being termed a nincompoop, particularly when moronic columnists, who are ever eager to be funny, descend to such vituperative levels. All columnists seem to have made it a duty to pan the Players' Club, when might have expected low puns on "Autumn Crocus" by McParfootin. But this time he has gone a little too far. If he has the intestinal fortitude to show his face at the Players' Club meeting on Tuesday, I shall take the greatest pleasure in ramming Mr. McParfootin's lengthy words down his columnist's throat. Nor would a

Gone Out of Business

THERE is an old Latin adage which says, "Caveat Emptor." Translated, it means, "Let the buyer beware."

It put the burden of seeing that one got his money's worth on the purchaser. It warned him to enter a shop with his eyes open, to have faith in no one, to keep his fingers crossed and then trust to Providence that he didn't lose his eye teeth in the bargain.

Advertising has put "Caveat Emptor" out of business. Today, merchants and manufacturers can't afford to risk the disappointment and disapproval of a dissatisfied customer. It is too easy for the customer to pick up a paper and find plenty of other places where real dollar value is given and where they practice the modern slogan, "We strive to please."

The good will of the buying public is the goal of the modern seller. Without it, his business cannot succeed.

Every time he advertises he puts his good name in your hands. His products must make good. They must be as advertised.

That's why it pays to read the advertisements and to buy advertised goods.

It's a good business policy.

The December export of farm implements and machinery was of the value of $212,732, as against $94,370 a year ago. The largest export was to British South Africa, at over $120,000. Others included the United States, at $31,000, and the United Kingdom at $11,000.
